The riots suspect includes some parliament and law enforcement agencies; how will American Justice treat them?

The riots on the Capitol on January 6th alerted the entire nation and especially the law enforcement agencies. Senate was the target as these rioters protested for Trump to become the US's next president.

The riots set the Capitol ablaze, and it took over four hours for the law enforcement to retake hold of it, marking the event as a dark day in the US's history, with repercussions more profound than imagined.

Now various speculations suggest that the entire ordeal had some government backing. Several members of the parliament are under observation for facilitating the rioters and the protest.

Not only that but around ten law enforcement people are also observed for not performing well against these protesters and enabling them.

The riots are responsible for the loss of lives of five people, including a police official.

Trump impeached again, the first-ever president in US history to be impeached twice, but why?

For the first time in the history of the United States, a president is impeached twice. President Trump's reign was laden with controversies and news headlines; however, these headlines rarely ever lead to a president's impeachment; Trump reached that level twice.

Trump's first impeachment for talking with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenski. This time, he is getting accused of the violent riots that took place on January 6, 2021.

President Trump blamed for inciting violent riots all over the capitol with his angering speeches.

10 Republican senators voted in favor of impeachment along with the Democrats, and the vote count became 232 in popularity compared to 197 against the impeachment.

The Senate majority leader Mitch McConnell says that there's not enough time for a fair trial against president Trump before president-elect Joe Biden takes the oath.

He said: "The president-elect himself stated last week that his inauguration on 20 January is the 'quickest' path for any change in the occupant of the presidency.

"In light of this reality, I believe it will best serve our nation if Congress and the executive branch spend the next seven days completely focused on facilitating a safe inauguration and an orderly transfer of power to the incoming Biden administration."

Will Biden's Inauguration be disturbed by Trump's Supporters?

House Democrats have briefed about the protocols for Biden's inauguration; they state that there is an increased threat saying it as "chilling and horrific."

Ilhan Omar expressed his surety on the similar riot that occurred on Wednesday while informing about the measures to counter it, to which Conor Lamb provided further details.

The memory of Trump's supporters' violent revolt is still fresh in our minds.

Several top democrats claimed that more needs to be done, including Carolyn Maloney, Jerry Nadler, and Bennie Thompson of Mississippi, revealing their unity in propagating it under Congress's leadership and all state, local, and federal authorities.

FBI sent a memo to nationwide law-enforcement agencies warning about possible riots in 50 states capitols, while also revealing a threat of an armed group to stage an uprising in the Capitol as Trump will step down.

Chuck Schumer notified senators about a briefing to be received on Tuesday about the inauguration security Senate source claimed. Briefers will include representatives of Secret Service, Defense Department, and Homeland Security.

Additional security measures are in place in the Capitol. Monday's briefing also provided other parameters.

Videos went viral in social media after showing what happened to Senators Mitt Romney of Utah, and Lindsey Graham of South Carolina at the airport. As a result, members of congress will get increased security at airports.

House Administration Committee enlightened Democratic members about their rights over access to the government resources, including Members' Congressional Handbook.

Muriel Bowser asked about a state of emergency declared in the city.
